The U.S. Constitution, Article I, Section 8, the General Welfare Clause

By Mr. GERLACH:

H.R. 6687.

Congress has the power to enact this legislation pursuant to the following:

The Congress enacts this bill pursuant to Clause 1 of Section 8 of Article I of the United States Constitution.

By Mr. JORDAN:

H.R. 6688.

Congress has the power to enact this legislation pursuant to the following:

The Constitution (specifically Article 1, Section 8, Clause 1) grants Congress the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises under certain conditions. Congress has previously utilized this grant of authority—broadened by the 16th Amendment to include taxation on income—and therefore existing law in this area would not be expanded by this bill. The legislation continues current tax policy in some cases (requiring no additional expansion of power) or limits and repeals current utilization of power by the Congress (also requiring no additional Constitutional Authority beyond what currently exists).

Congress has similarly utilized the constitutional power to withdraw funds from the treasury (affirmed in Article 1, Section 9, Clause 7) so long as the funds are spent on a constitutionally appropriate power; if Congress has authority to fund what it currently does fund, then it also has the power to limit the amount that it appropriates to these ends. Additionally, this legislation repeals or reduces the funding for various federal programs and repeals certain requirements imposed by federal legislation and agencies, many of which have a questionable basis in the constitutional powers of Congress. By reducing or repealing these programs and regulations, this legislation is acting on the affirmation in the 10th Amendment that “powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.” This legislation would more closely align the federal government with both the letter and spirit of the Constitution in the ways stated above.
